At was then decided to wait for Mr. Wallace, who was on his way on a late train from Deer Lodge, where he has been engaged as counsel in a could be seen and heard. He straightened himself out and told his story. He murder trial. After a series of recesses Mr. Wallace arrived, and at 1939 o'clock the house resumed. A formal ballot by roll call for choice of Unite! States senators. call for choice of United States senators under all circumstances, who had been then followed each representative naming chastised, but had always responded when Clark and Maginnis, Mr. Hardenbrook was his services were needed; and who would be not present. An adjournment was then a bright light in the senate from the great taken until 10 a, m. to-day. During the interests of the state demanded that it be couragement. The previous day had brought forth Tom Power, backed by threatening strength. Couch had perfected arrangements to assist the little commodore and the Missoula wing of the party had shown strength altogether unanticipated. The talk against Mantle increased hourly, and with it came rumors of all sorts of combinations to defeat the Butte candidate. There was no cessation in the efforts of Mantle's men to bring him in a winner, They talked, argued and plead without in creasing their numbers or adding to their strength. When the first rays of the morning sun flushed over the new fall of snow. they were left with a hopeless chance of winning, though they were certain of a goodly support when the time for the struggle arrived. Perhaps the most noticeable feature of the campaign was the increase of bitterness between the different factions of republicans. Attorney Haldorn, of Butte, was a general target for attacks from the Mantle men, who grew sore as they saw all chances of winning slipping away from them. As the day wore on they renewed arguments previously given and hatched up arguments previously given and hatched up new ones, but they appeared to be used without effort. An element that they could not successfully combat with worked stead-ily against them, gaining strength as it traveled among the Mantle cohorts. After the dispensing of "boodle" began the Mantle men commenced whistling for courage, When the long anticipated ball-ting finally started their hopes were slightly renewed. A caretheir hopes were slightly renewed. A careful canvass of the situation convaced them, however, that Mantle's strength among the legislators was more apparent than real. They were by no means assured of the fidel-They were by no means assured of the fidelity of the voters who claimed to be with him, and these doubts further increased until last evening Mantie's men had about conceded that the chances of their man were hopeless. They believe that knowles will be the other man if he will accept. They are very much in doubt about this. They are very much in doubt about this. They claim that Knowles will secure a life sin care in the shape of a United States district judgeship. They doubt if he will throw away the chances of securing this place for the uncertainties of a fraudulent United States senatorship. On the other hand they concede that few men in the country are the other hand they concede that few men in the country are throwing away United States senatorships. The candidacy of Power they regard as less threatening than that of knowles. They say that Power's postion is that if a west side candidate is to be noomated he is willing to step out of the way, but as long as there is a chance for an east sider to take

THE REPUBLICAN SITUATION.

It Looks Like Knowles if He Will Accept — What the Senators Did.

The cold wave that reached town early yesterdsy morning carried a political chill to the Mantle hearts. At every drop of the mercury they found a new cause for discouragement. The previous day had that it was their duty to lay aside personal feeling and nominate a man who was a gentleman, indeed; a man in whom there was no guile, who was identified with the vital interests of the state; who has the that it was their duty to lay aside personal feeling and nominate a man who was a gentleman, indeed; a man in whom there was no guile, who was identified with the vital interests of the state; who has the brains to grapple with every question affecting the state and whose actual commercial experience has closely allied him with the glory of Montana, and whose known integrity and fidelity had never been questioned. He desired to present for consideration the name of the Hon. Thomas C. Power. This nomination was seconded by Greenough, of Missoult.

The clerk called the roll, while the thirty rumps, one after the other, recorded his vote for Sanders. The conclusion of the roll call brought forth a round of appliause that made the windows rattle. After the lapse of a few minutes, Cory, Loompson and Loud brought the Warnorse into the hall. As the crowd cheered again and Witter presented him to the men who had cast their. As the crowd cheered again and Witter presented him to the men who had cast their votes for the great wheelhorse of the republican party the colonel said: "In the progress of events you have to-day taken a single step toward the completion of those duties which have made Montana a state, and in that action have mingled my name. I did not come here to make a speech; in fact, I am here under protest and unexpectedly. But no moment is too early to express the sincere thanks of mise who have made my candidacy an object of concern to themselves, for your action.

a bright light in the senate from the great state of Montana. The widely diversified interests of the state demanded that it be represented by men from different localities. He would nominate the Hon. Lee Mantle of Silver Bow.

This was greeted with a good deal of applause. The Mantle faction made as much noise as anybody. Hoffman and Monteath seconded the nonination.

Bardman, of Choteau, who is otherwise known as "Curiew Jack" looked modestly around after he got on his feet and nominated Dogberry Carpenter without making any remarks. This nom nation was received with applause that was not wild loud or prolonged.

The next man who had a nomination to make was Bray. He made it while he east significant glances at the followers of the young candidate from the west side. This, Mr. Bray thought, was an important era in the history of the state, and he felt it to be a duty to select the very best men for the positions of United States senators.

The thought had been forced upon him that it was their duty to lay aside personal feeling and nominate a man who was a gentleman, indeed; a man in whom a there are forced with a proposition of United States senators.
